CHoR Patient Honored Posthumously

Paralyzed following a car accident in 2005 that also left him dependent on a ventilator and feeding tube, Jerziah Moore was a resident of Children's Hospital of Richmond at VCU's (CHoR) Transitional Care Unit for eight years. During that time, Jerziah developed talents in music, art and drama, learned to paint using a specially-designed mouth guard to hold his brush, was recognized multiple times for his paintings and completed his high school studies.

Jerziah, who passed away in December 2016, was honored at a ceremony at CHoR's Brook Road Campus in March. His family accepted his high school diploma from representatives of Newport News Public Schools, Jerziah's home school district. The Moores, along with Jerziah's teacher, Ruth Sanguiliano, M.Ed., also accepted the Spotlight Virginia award, which highlights students, teachers, administrators and parents who demonstrate innovative initiatives in transition for young adults with disabilities. Sponsored by the Center for Transition Innovations at Virginia Commonwealth University, the award recognized Jerziah's interest in broadcast communications and his use of a communication device to "DJ" for CHoR patients and hospital staff. Prior to his death, he also participated in an assessment with a local radio station where he had hoped to work as a DJ for an hour a week.
